Many people believe that the average Chinaman of New York comes over from the Flowery Kingdom an adept laundryman. Nothing is more opposed to the truth. In China there are no cuffs, collars, or shirt-bosoms whatever. Ironing is an unknown art. Bleaching is effected by leaving the cotton, linen, or silk in the sunshine. A flat-iron, therefore, is in China a rara avis. As washing is a purely physical labor, in-volving no intelligence whatever, the social status of a laundryman in the Middle Kingdom is the lowest possible. His pay there averages about 10 cents n day. In the United States this condition of affairs is reversed; laundry work is a fine art, and the pay seldom falls to ow $15 a week. The origin of the chaose laundry in America is qui e o i. When gold was discovered in alifornia the news spread all over the w r d and in due time reached China. As while by possips and as published in the new-papers and magazines of that land, there was far across the ocean a constry in which the mountains were so if gold, and in which the poorest Inhorer could easily earn 20 taels ($28) a day. This news to a populace whose daily tell brought in from 8 to 30 cents a day was a revelation. All who could beg or borrow the necessary cash set sail for the Golden Gate. Upon this came the contracts from the railroad builders of the West. They could not obtain American laborets for less than $5 a day; but they could bring over unlimited numbers of Chinese for almost any vrice. Mongolians have been imported from Hong Hong and Canton time and egain for $12 a month and board This movement culminated in the building of the Union and Central Pacific. These employed over 10,000 Chinamen. For several years mining and rathroad construction gave employment to the multitudes of Mongols who flocked to these shores. They all did well and their letters to their homes, and more especially their continual remittances served to increase the desire to emigrate to the United States. Then came a sudden change. Mines and mining became unpopular and to a certain extent unprofitable. Railroad construction dropped off 75 per cent. As a result tens of thousands of Chinese were thrown out of employment In a strange land, confronted by a language and customs whose genius was diametrically opposed to their own, they were without warning thrown on their own resources. Many adapted themselves to their new surroundings and became cooks, nurses, domestics, street-sweepers and expressmen. The majority, however, became laundrymen. Wah Lung, of San Francisco, noticed in 1852 that all Americans who had money were white starched linen and paid enormous prices to washerwomen for washing and ironing. He opened up a laundry in consequence, and by charging lower rates than his competitors succeeded in building up a large and remunerative business. His friends and relatives soon followed his example Fark World.

Dainty Dishes.

A very pretty and inexpensive party dish is this: Procure a dozen penny sponge cakes, of the ordinary oblong brick shape, and cover the tons with the following mixture, coating half t e quantity with white and half with pink icing; a little saved from that used for the center cake will do. Whisk a packet of Nelson's Albumen with three tea-poonfuls of cold water to a strong froth, mix in eight ounces of pounded loaf sugar, a teaspoonful of powdered chocolate; flavor with vanilla and cover the sponge cakes with it, about half an inch thick. Do not put it too near the edge, as it is liable to spread. Bake for ten minutes; watch it well as it requires quick baking, but not too hot an oven. Then, when the chocolate is cold, cover half the cakes with white icing and balf with pink arrange on a

For an invalid's breakfast it is re-commended:that the yolk of an egg should be carefully beaten up in a cup, removing every particle of white. Fill up with tea and add some clotted cream. The whites that are not used in the tea may always be employed as a whip for pies of puddings. The bread may be varied with milk rolls, crescents, zweback or other tempting looking fancy bread. Puddings may be made of prepared barley, prepared tapioca, or plain tapioca, well soaked before boiling, with an egg added. A change can be made in light puddings by mixing up some stewed fruit with the pudding before baking. Bread crumbs from stale bread make a mice light pudding, and a tiny custard boiled in a very small basin or cup, turns out nicely, and is enough for one person.

The prejudices against Americans do not exist merely in the minds of the ignorant and uneducated, but are quite as frequently found among the "upper classes," the well-educated, and even the leaders of thought—viz., the clergy and the journalists. Many superficial observers, especially Americans who visit this country for a temporay "outing" and remain here a few days or few weeks, will write home stating that the "better class" of Mexicans are very fond of Americans; that they always treat of Americans; that they always treat them with great deference and are the political people in the world. Those foreigners who know the Mexicans best tell me—and I believe it to be true that the Mexicans have a great delicacy in concealing from you their real sen-timents when it is considered by them politic or prudent to do so, and hence you can never gather from their conduct toward you in personal interviews what their real sentiment toward you is. Personally, I like this. For if a man hates you, or is antipathetic to you, it is far more agreeable to have him conceal that fact when you are brought in close contact with him, though, of course, more dangerous to you oftentimes. This same trait is very noticea-ble in most French men and French women. The American and the Englishman, save when "refined" by contact with French people, are usually quite the reverse-more brusque, more blunt, less courteous as far as outward graces and polish are concerned, and far more truthful, genuine, and to be relied upon than any of the Latin races. I find the highly-cultured and polished Mexicans exceedingly agreesble people to meet, to converse with, to be entertained by, but there is a con-stant feeling of their insincerity being impressed upon me, both while in their presence and after leaving them-a feeling that they do not like us because we are Americans, because they erroneously regard us as desiring to wrong them, to overreach them (or their fellow-countrymen) in trade, to spread a religious propoganda throughout their country, swallowing up and overflow-ing (the power of the long-established national faith, and even that our nation has aggressive designs upon their country and will sooner or later swallow it up, merging it into our union and thus destroying their patria and making of it a mere dependency of the United States. Of course I know that any cultured Mexican of whom you may ask: "Is this true?" will at once earneetly reply: "No! it is quite an error to believe any such absurdity as that." But such denials prove nothing. The true way to learn the real sentiment of human nature. A poor woman with a Mexicans in this regard is to judge them by their writings, as found in their newspapers, reviews, and books, and by their actions, which do, indeed, speak louder than words.—Sam Francisco Caronicle.
